

Bruin Toastmaster's Mentor/Mentee Goals

As a mentor:

- Try to get your mentee to come out to meetings. Encourage them to take on functionary/speaking roles and provide feedback and or support if they need it.
- Offer to evaluate the speech of your mentee(s) if you are not already evaluating them. This way, they will get more feedback and you will be able to work with them on their goals.
- Try and see what your mentee(s) want to get out of toastmasters. If possible, offer to help them brainstorm or organize their speeches but make sure to be a guiding force rather than telling them what to do.

As a mentee:

- Communicate your goals with your mentor: they are an asset and resource for you, make sure to probe their brain for any advice or tips.
- Try and ask your mentors if they have any ideas on where you can improve. If they think that everything is fine, then try and find ways to make your speeches more innovative and challenging—this will ensure maximum growth within the club.
- Ultimately, ask for any advice you can get, whether this is within or outside toastmasters. Although your mentor might be as busy as you are, you are encouraged to meet outside of the regular Toastmaster's meeting time in order to express your ideas or concerns.
